Bullying
Michelle Munday, Madelyn Cabrera, Kionna Romans
Justice and the Outsider; COM 128-FY38, Professor Bettina Murray

Findings: Bullying in College
- According to a Health Day News study in 2012, 15 percent of college students studied reported being bullied, and nearly 22 percent reported there being cases of cyber bullying in college.
- Of those being cyber-bullied, 25 percent said it was through a social networking site, 21 percent through texting, 16 percent through email, and 13 percent through instant messages.
- 42 percent of students said they had seen someone being bullied by another student, while 8 percent reported bullying another student, and nearly 15 percent had seen a professor bully a student, while 4 percent said they had been bullied by a professor.

Introduction
- Bullying is a constant act of verbal, physical, and emotional abuse.
- Often times, the bully is someone who has low self-esteem and was previously bullied.
- The premise of this project is to make people aware that there is a better future. Whether you are the bully or the victim, there are programs available to help.
- Spreading the word can help prevent future abuse and help heal the emotional wounds of those who have been bullied.

Methods
- Interview with Pablo Perez at the Counseling Center.
- Researched bullying rates and information on bullies.

Conclusion
- Facts obtained from personal interview:
- Peer mentoring is a program connected with John Jay College that helps individuals deal with the transition from high school to college, as well as provides a support system to those who need it.
- For students who are victims of bullying, the peer mentoring program is a place where they can come and talk about their issues and, with the help of their mentor, find a solution to the problem.
- This program serves nearly 800 freshman and transfer students.
- To become a member of this program, one must have a 3.0 GPA and be involved in campus functions.

References
- Interview with Pablo Perez, peer mentor.