Students as Political Agents: Promoting Voting and Political Participation in Our Communities

The COVID-19 pandemic and the recent Black Lives Matter protests show us the ingrained economic and social inequalities of our currently political moment. On the eve of an important presidential election, we know that our basic democratic rights to vote also vulnerable. This talk led by Prof. Susan Kang continues with a discussion of the legal, social and other barriers to voting in New York City, New York state, and beyond, as well as discusses the ways that students and work to encourage great voter turnout and participation in their local communities.

Monday, October 19 / 1:40-2:55PM

Register here to get the Zoom information