

ACADEMIC AFFAIRS UPDATE

November 5, 2024

Civic engagement starts with student engagement – our colleagues in Student Affairs put on a great Halloween party last week

Dear Academic Affairs Colleagues,

One of the benefits of a college education is increased civic engagement, including likelihood of voting. Today, I want to thank all staff and faculty for the work you do to bring students into our community, to show them the many other communities that exist and how complex the fabric of our world is, and to develop their engagement as citizens of our city, our country, and our world.

What Are We Doing About Learning Loss?

Math faculty teaching first-year courses and staff of the Math & Science Resources Center are tackling the problem of learning loss head on. Too many NYC high school students are not meeting grade-level proficiency in math. Many of these students come to John Jay without the preparation to succeed in their first-year math courses.

The faculty and MSRC are working together to expand tutoring and workshops, including a new program partnering faculty with specific tutors. Thanks to these efforts, more than double the number of students have attending tutoring and workshops compared to last fall.

College Planning – Be Heard This Year

This is a pivotal year for the college. We are responding to NISS recommendations, responding to COACHE survey findings, and embarking on the creation of our next 5-year comprehensive Strategic Plan. We need your participation to improve.

The Office of Student Academic Engagement and Retention is seeking 20 faculty volunteers to participate in focus groups aimed at enhancing our approach to creating an integrative, cohesive, and equitable academic structure. Focus group sessions will be one hour, scheduled during community hour this month. Your insights will play a crucial role in refining our strategies and ensuring a more inclusive educational environment. If interested, please email Nathaniel Galen (ngalen@jjay.cuny.edu) ASAP.

John Jay a HSI Fulbright Leader Again

John Jay was named one of 50 Hispanic-Serving Institutions recognized by the U.S. Department of State for its support of Fulbright Scholars among its students.

The Fulbright Program aims to build lasting connections between Americans and people of other countries, and having strong HSI participation in the Fulbright Program is critical to fully represent the diversity of the United States.
